Roseland Gallery

Gold walls are accented with charcoal stone tiles, the whole illuminated by black track lighting. Not your typical Queen West shop, Roseland is the decidedly French baby of Françoise Larcade, a designer, and husband Dante, a fourth-generation antiques dealer. When their neighbours trade in mid-century teak and kitsch, they prize graceful, storied pieces more properly found in estate homes, not condo lofts. Here, beauty takes the form of an 18th-century Provençal commode ($24,494), enormous 17th-century walnut and pine doors from the south of France ($22,400), a small Chinese 19th-century buffet in elm ($3,000) and a pair of glossy elm Chinese side tables ($3,600). Still, lofters will find something to lust after in eye-catching artisanal works, such as colourful metal stools made from recycled gas tanks by a Senegalese artist ($650), lamps made of 35-year-old computer motherboards ($1,660) and papier mâché sculptures that resemble huge planters in various colours ($1,050).
